A music label, also known as a record label, is a brand of music recordings and music videos that is owned by a company. The company generally has marketing teams and press teams to promote its artists in addition to publishing their music. Music labels are categorized into major labels and indie labels, with major labels representing 60% to 70% of the music industry. The typical advantages of signing a music label deal include more publicity for an artist and increased access to resources for music production. At the same time, label deals often stipulate a high level of royalties collected by the label company and partial loss of creative control.

THP a world in which music labels do not exist.
